College Catalog History (HIST)

The history discipline offers courses in African, Asian, European, Latin American, Middle Eastern, and United States history. These courses examine particular historical periods from a variety of perspectives. Political, social, diplomatic, religious, economic, intellectual, and cultural considerations are integral parts of the courses offered. This broad approach provides an opportunity for students to understand better the value commitments of their own and other cultures. Additionally, by investigating events through the interpretation and comparison of sources, students learn the fundamental skills of analysis and critical thinking. By making these contributions to the College's liberal arts curriculum, the history discipline prepares its major and minor students for careers in teaching, law, business, government, and other professions.
