All in for a winning start

Eileen Jahnke ioined the college in 2001. As vice president for business and finance, she oversees the departments of finance. human resources, facilities and auxiliary services. In addition. she provides financial quidance for the administrative team and the board of trustees, and is responsible for the management of the college's budget and investment portfolio.

magine, after the Mass of the Holy Spirit this past August, 580 new students marching down Baer Mall in wonder and with a sense of awe. Our faculty, in all of their graduation garb finery, line both sides of the mall, clapping and cheering them on. Then these same students enjoy a barbecue dinner, a great live band on the riverfront, and fireworks. That is the welcome our new students get at St. Norbert College. That is Convocation on our campus.

I have come to love the cyclical nature of the year in a college setting. There is a definite beginning and end to each school year. You can almost feel the entire campus exhaling, the day after Commencement. And it always feels so good to have the campus fill back up with students again in the fall. You can just feel a real infusion of renewed energy.

Each student's college journey has a distinct beginning at Convocation; a beginning that leads in four great years to their Commencement. I love Convocation. The excitement is palpable when our new students are arriving full of anticipation for what their future at St. Norbert College holds.

Around the start of this academic year, I read an article in the Green Bay Press-Gazette, written by Patti Zarling and called "Nine Things to Know About Back to School." Local principals and administrators shared tips for students: develop good sleep habits; organize for the new year; set goals; meet your teachers; be engaged; create a learning space; seek help early; choose after-school activities; have fun!

Great tips – and I would do well to try them myself! But I do have a recommendation of my own to add – or rather, it's one I try to follow, but it actually originated with Brett Favre.

My husband and I have been huge Packers fans all of our lives. Yes, even through the tough times in the 1970s and 1980s. Then, in 1992, Brett Favre came along. My husband loved Brett Favre, not only while he was a Packer, but even after the bad break-up when he left the Packers organization. In fact, we even had to go and see a game in Minneapolis when Favre was a (gasp) Minnesota Viking.

My husband especially loved Favre's toughness and his willingness to take risks. Most of all, Favre had fun. It was clear he thoroughly enjoyed the game of football and always gave it his all. And it showed. Every single game. That made him incredibly fun to watch. Who can forget him running down the length of the field with his helmet off when he connected on one of the first plays to Andre Rison at the Super Bowl in New Orleans; or the game in Oakland right after his father passed away? Favre left us with many great memories and some really good lessons.

Two of our daughters were in grade school when the Packers won Super Bowl XXXI in New Orleans in 1997. One of our daughters was invited to see the parade and spend some time at Lambeau Field during the welcome-home celebration. I suspect the only things she will remember about all of that is how long it took for the parade with the buses of Packers players to get to them, and how cold it was. Though our daughters were really happy to have a day off of school, they really couldn't understand "what the big deal was." We could.

So it should be no surprise that we have thoroughly enjoyed Favre's induction into the Packers Hall of Fame and his recent induction into the Pro Football Hall of Fame. Favre shared some great words of wisdom in his induction speech at the Pro Football Hall of Fame on Aug. 7, 2016, when he said: "So when I look back over my 20 years, I can honestly tell you - I can't tell you a lot, but I can honestly tell you that I hold no regrets. Did we win every game? No. Did I make every throw? No. Did I make mistakes? More than I care to count. But I can say this: There was never one time where I did not give it all I could."

What good advice for anyone, anytime in their life - but especially for new students at the start of their college experience. My hope for all of our students is to get to Commencement with no regrets, knowing that when they reflect on their career at St. Norbert, they will be able to say, with Brett Favre, "There was never one time where I did not give it all I could."

In fact, perhaps the next time I play a friendly game of golf against my husband, I will try just a little harder to beat him; to give it my all. You never know, maybe I can actually beat him for a third time in our lifetime.

Return on investment

Entrepreneurial education extends to investors, too. "We need to educate the people who have money about what kinds of risks are worth taking. A lot of money that exists here is money that was made the old-fashioned way; they earned it, saved it and took care of it," explains Kevin Quinn. "Changing to a mindset where they are willing to be in on 100 things and have three of them hit it big is tough. I would like for St. Norbert and the Schneider School to be a catalyst to get people speaking the same language about investment opportunities."

Already, businessschool faculty and students have become more involved in the local business community through their presence at events. "We buy a table. I invite our students and faculty. They get to know people. They see former students. We start to become more integrated into the fabric of the business community, which is my goal."

Sharks welcome here

A report from the Kauffman Foundation has Wisconsin last among states -50 out of 50 – in environment and climate for entrepreneurship. The Schneider School is taking steps to improve this ranking, expanding its entrepreneurial mission to provide a conduit for start-ups. The new "Shark Tank"-inspired elevator-pitch contest, spearheaded by Joy Pahl (Business Administration) and open to any student with a product or service, is just one outcome.

Entrepreneurial teams, which must include at least one St. Norbert College undergraduate or graduate student in any area of study, may pitch business plans on Dec. 6 to compete for $1,000 first-place and $500 secondplace prizes. Pitches will be made to a panel of judges in 90 seconds or less.

In preparation for the contest, meetings with guest entrepreneurs were offered earlier this semester. "Part of the vision and mission of the Schneider School of Business & Economics is to prepare business leaders," says Joy Pahl. "Within that vision should be the whole entrepreneurial space.'

Advisors light the path

When sisters Brooke (Van Schyndel) Hoffman '11 and Dani (Van Schyndel) Schuh '08 wanted to organize a service trip for their middleschool students, they turned back to campus service leaders for advice. With Sandy Murphy (Emmaus Center) they researched locations and optimal group size. Murphy and Jennifer Nissen (Sturzl Center) then invited them to train with student TRIPS leaders.

The sisters both work in the Green Bay area: Hoffman teaches social studies and Schuh is a Gifted & Talented specialist. Their planning culminated in a June trip to St. Louis, where students served with Kingdom House. Hoffmann says: "The students gained a new perspective and created long-lasting friendships from this trip. The model that Jennifer and Sandy shared with us set them up to achieve those two things."

Service award

For the first time, St. Norbert College has been listed in all four community service honor roll categories in the President's Higher Education Honor Roll administered by the Corporation for National & Community Service. The CNCS has recognized the college for its leadership among institutions of higher education, for its support of volunteering, servicelearning and civic engagement across the general, economic opportunity, education and interfaith segments. St. Norbert was one of only two colleges and universities in the state to receive the honor with distinction.

Involvement Fair

With some 90 student organizations to choose from, there's no shortage of ways to be as engaged outside the classroom as in it.

Want to curl, trapshoot or wakeboard? Want to be a Knitting Knight, a TV Knight, one of Dumbledore's Knights or a Knight Against Trafficking? Want to be a Kappa, an Untouchable, a Republican? A Best Buddy, a Pen Pal, a Wishmaker? Longing to go Beyond Borders or Love Your Melon? There's an org for that.

And at the beginning of each new academic year, at Involvement Fair time, St. Norbert's student groups hang out their shingles, decorate their stalls and set about recruiting in earnest.

Aristotle, Duquette and community

s of Aug. 1, 2016, I became a civilian again. I completed my move out of the associate dean's office in the Hall of Fine Arts and made my way back into Boyle Hall alongside my faculty colleagues. It was a significant transition for me at the culmination of a rather long term of leadership service, and it provides a window of opportunity to reflect on being a faculty citizen at St. Norbert College. As it happens, in my political philosophy courses I address topics such as ruler-ship and governance, citizenship, the nature of political power, and the various forms of political society. In particular, I have tried to convey to students the relevance of the history of political ideas to contemporary political life and that when evaluating and judging political conceptions, and even policy proposals, we have something to learn from the great thinkers in political philosophy.

Of course, it is one thing to theorize and think critically about politics and it is another to be an actual participant; and in the contemporary world - certainly in our own nation – it is difficult to be a participant other than by exercising the right to vote for elected representatives. As I look forward to a sabbatical to get back to research and writing, as well as to rethink and retool my teaching, I've had occasion also to look back not only on the last eight years of administrative service (the first seven as associate dean for humanities and fine arts, and the last year as acting associate dean for the newly formed division of visual and performing arts) but also to my career at St. Norbert College overall, and to think about what attracted me to the college and motivated me to become collegially involved with faculty governance and administrative service.

What St. Norbert College offered me from Day One – and what was so attractive in contrast with political life at large – was the opportunity to be a functioning participant in the self-governance of the faculty. Indeed, the faculty constitution, with its empowerment of each and every member through the faculty assembly, along with the ability to serve on governing committees, provides for something much like the ancient Athenian polis where the members stand as equals who participate freely, taking turns in both governing and being governed as the occasions for particular forms of participation arise. Thus, I have found the political life of the faculty most invigorating and a unique way to exercise concrete fellow citizenship.

Then, during my tenure of office as an associate dean, I was very much aware that my role as a faculty administrator was not only in managing division affairs and executing policy with accountability to the dean of the college but also in providing a voice for the faculty regarding its interests, concerns and goals.

Having been drawn from the faculty for this service, and then going back to regular faculty duties, my sensibility is not that of a professional manager or bureaucrat, but of a civil servant in the mode of faculty participant in the life of the college. While the purview of the faculty at the college is academics (and the faculty citizen acts largely within that context), we also have the Norbertine ethos of communio as a guiding aspiration for everyone at the college: All of us are not just employees at the institution but also members of a community that affords everyone opportunities to be active participants – a community where all are deserving of equal concern and respect.

But how do we embody a theory or conception of citizen participation in actual practice? From a philosophical perspective, a realistic view of political concepts is that, while they can provide guidance for constructing an ideal community, they do not guarantee success in practice - and certainly not perfection. Thus, we are always challenged to balance the recognition of our accomplishments with the need for self-criticism: to be careful that, in pursuing an ideal of inclusive participation, we do not become sanguine about where we are; that we can take pride without being prideful (or boastful!); and that we can live up to our ideals while recognizing and admitting imperfection. A point that Aristotle made, and that I was reminded of in view of my recent experience, is that to be an ethical person (and, I would add, an ethical community) we need not only to have a proper understanding of the moral principles that should guide us, but also to develop the right habits of action. Perhaps the greater challenge for us as citizens of this community will always be keeping vigilance in forming those habits of active participation.

David Duquette, professor of philosophy, joined the St. Norbert faculty in 1985. He is currently researching and writing on ruler-ship and citizenship in political thought. In April 2016 he received the Reverend Edmund Burke Leadership Award in recognition of his service as associate dean.

A saint for a saint: statues on the move

After 118 years, St. Norbert of Xanten at last commands a view over his eponymous college. "Probably since the building's been built there's always been the hope to have a St. Norbert on top of the doors of Main Hall," says the Rev. Jay Fostner, O.Praem., '84. "Well, I always wanted something: a saint overlooking the campus - blessing us, praying for us, taking care of us." In 2006, a temporary solution presented itself for the empty niche. The statue of Our Lady that used to stand near Burke Hall needed a safer home. "We love St. Mary!" Fostner says, "The abbey is dedicated to St. Mary. But still it always felt strange that Mary was on the top of Main Hall." Norbert of Xanten now presides, and Our Lady (a gift of the Cristan family) is bound for the niche on the façade of Hugh Hall.

Homeless and on retreat

"Do people really stay here?" asked a visitor while on tour of St. Norbert Abbey's retreat rooms. Tony Pichler MTS '94 looked warily around a room he describes as "very Spartan" with just a "bed, desk, chair, sink, floor and ceiling." But the woman a guest at St. John the Evangelist homeless shelter – seemed thrilled. "It was like she thought she had entered the Taj Mahal, with the possibility of getting a bedroom of her own," recounts Pichler. And that's what sparked the idea to begin St. Norbert Abbey overnight retreats for people experiencing homelessness.

For the past two years, Pichler and a group of six others involved with the abbey's Norbertine Center for Spirituality (NCS) have facilitated these retreats under the title Finding Our Way. They take place at the abbey in January for women and February for men, with a maximum of 15 participants at each. Retreatants have the chance to explore their relationship with themselves, with others, and with the Divine. Activities include plotting out a timeline of one's life and a "Healing of Memories" prayer service in the form of a guided meditation. Because of the participants' challenging circumstances, the retreat also, intentionally, features much time for rest and reflection.

Pichler, co-director of the NCS, keeps in mind the day-to-day realities for most participants, who typically spend their nights on a mat in a room with up to 49 other people each night – some of whom may be snoring, restless or "carrying on." In contrast, Finding Our Way offers each participant a room of their own at the abbey. "These are some of the most vulnerable and marginalized people in our community," says Pichler, so having a room of one's own means a lot. And each retreatant is able to attend free of cost, thanks to the abbey's provision of programming, space and food.

"The Norbertine Center for Spirituality, in particular, takes the notion of spirituality as active service and reflective prayer seriously," says Pichler. "Especially when it comes to serving the most vulnerable and marginalized populations."

It's an understanding of spirituality that is reflected in feedback, says Sister Judy Miller, who helps to plan the retreats. "I have learned there is hope for me," one participant stated, while another wrote: "I have learned that spirituality is not some esoteric endeavor carried out by a few. Spirituality is useful to everyone, even the homeless and poor." Miller says, "It's nice to know there is a place one can go without being judged, and instead being embraced for who one is." Several participants have returned to the abbey – some to participate in spiritual direction with her.

Most important, say both Miller and Pichler, is what can happen when people are allowed space to take a step back from the shelter or streets and reflect on their lives. This retreat may be a contributing factor in enabling some participants to change their situations: Several who were homeless at the time of their retreats are now holding steady jobs and living in their own apartments.

Treasure / 1917 Letterman Sweater

Don "Maz" Maslinski '63

This letter sweater belonged to the Rev. Gordon "Legs" Shaney, Class of 1917, two-letter man and center for the football team. It reminds me of good times gone away. At small private colleges today, you're probably not seeing a lot of letter sweaters because of the prohibitive cost. But seeing an object like this one rekindles and reaffirms how long ago this place made a commitment to athletics. Why did they do it? It wasn't for recognition. It wasn't for profit. They did it for the right reasons. Why we have athletics today is really the same reason they had it then. If you look at the whole liberal arts tradition, athletics just fits in. It adds the physical element to that mission of developing the whole person.

Don "Maz" Maslinski '63, athletics director 1998-2004, is currently the Green Knights' assistant offensive line coach and director of athletics fundraising.

We play as a team, challenges and all

Dealing with adversity is nothing new for Green Knight basketball: especially this season, displaced as it is from its home court; and most especially for two frontcourt players on this year's roster, forward Jackie Ostojic '20 (left, above) and center Mallory Nickerson '17 (right).

The ongoing redevelopment of the Schuldes site is presenting its own challenges: 6 a.m. off-campus practices all season, and home games played at UW-Green Bay. Add to that the plight of Nickerson, who played in all 26 games a season ago, averaging 7.5 points and 4.7 rebounds per contest. The senior continues to deal with severe pain in her left foot. The distress surfaced in 2014, leading to an MRI that revealed a benign tumor. Surgery followed. "For a time after the surgery, it was okay," explains Nickerson (who also competes in track and field). "But the pain then started coming back."

Her current pain could be from nerve damage. She hopes a series of injections will provide relief. "She is so important to our program," says Coach Connie Tilley (pictured with her players). "Even when she was out the long period of time, she was there every day helping out her teammates." When Nickerson returned to the court late in her sophomore season, she immediately displayed her talents. In a first-round NCAA Tournament game, she scored 11 points in only nine minutes of action. "She was scoring every time down the court," says Tilley. "I thought, 'I'm not taking her out until she falls down.' She was on fire. I don't think that anyone knows what she's gone through. It's remarkable."

In her final season, Nickerson, one of four seniors on the squad, wants to continue a pair of streaks. "We have won conference and played in the NCAA Tournament the last three years," she says. "This is our last year, so we need to keep it going. That's our goal." She can count unreservedly on enthusiasm and support in pursuit of that goal from Ostojic and the other new first-year students on the team.

Ostojic faces her own challenges. She was born deaf in her right ear – a loss "significant enough that it plays a role in my everyday life," she explains. "We didn't figure it out until I was in kindergarten." For several years, Ostojic made it a point to sit in the front of class, two seats to the right of the teacher. Later, teachers used assisted-listening devices so she could hear in the classroom. "I wore a hearing device on my left ear, my good ear," explains Ostojic. "I was so excited. That was amazing. My sophomore year, I got my hearing aids."

Ostojic, who is skilled at reading lips, dislikes playing basketball with hearing aids, so she needs additional strategies. "Something clicked," she explains. "I put the hope and trust in my teammates. We figured out [nonverbal] codes and gestures to communicate. When we are in the huddle, I stand right in front of the coach. That's where I need to be. Nobody makes a big deal about it."

Tilley says, "This is a perfect group to be part of her support. I think the one thing that impresses me about her is she has a lot of confidence in herself; where's she's going and what she's doing. She's not going to let this set her back."

Upswing

Women's golf participation continues to rise while the team's scores go down. It's good news in both directions for Coach Dave Minten. As recently as 2014, the team experienced problems fielding five players to compete. In 2015, numbers increased to 11 and, in 2016, the addition of nine first-years took the total to 17. For the first time in school history, the program was able to field teams for two events in the same weekend: one competing at Whispering Springs Golf Course in Fond du Lac, Wis., and a second team at La Crosse (Wis.) Country Club.

Later this season, at St. Andrew's Golf & Country Club in Chicago, the Green Knights logged a school record-best 18-hole (338) and 36hole (710) score, with all golfers recording their individual career low scores on Day Two of the tournament: Jessica Dyksterhouse '18 (87-82), Elizabeth Bobinski '20 (91-83), Kelsey Motto '18 (98-84), Amy Smits '19 (96-89) and Kayley Sjoholm '20 (105-91).

At the making of a saint

A semester at John Cabot University in Rome gave Aaron Waldoch '18 the chance to attend the canonization of Mother Teresa of Calcutta in September.

"Universal," Waldoch wrote to friends back on campus. "I thought this word perfectly described what I found to be one of the defining elements of the canonization Mass."

The day of the canonization, he left his apartment at 4 a.m. to walk to the Vatican, where he found individuals from all over the world gathered to celebrate the life and mission of the church's newest saint.

Waldoch, a history education major with a minor in theology and religious studies, picks up the story: "The atmosphere of the crowd was one of joy and pride that a modern-day saint was to be canonized.

"Pope Francis declared in his homily, 'Following Jesus is a serious task, and, at the same time, one filled with joy. This sentiment certainly resonated with the crowd gathered at St. Peter's Square.

"Before the Mass began, all pilgrims gathered prayed a rosary together, illustrating the universality of the church's prayers and devotions. While it was in Italian, I was still able to follow along in my native language, as did many others. This same demonstration of unity occurred throughout the Mass, and during the Lord's Prayer and Sign of Peace. I shared the Peace with people from all over the globe. One man, Vi, from Sicily, who stood next to me at the canonization, told me that his devotion to Mother Teresa had led him to an in-depth relationship with Christ. According to Vi, St. Teresa is a figure needed in today's culture since many adhere to a lifestyle that is self-absorbed and not concerned with the less fortunate or anyone else. I ... thought of a famous Mother Teresa quote: 'Spread love everywhere you go. Let no one ever come to you without leaving happier. "Attending the canonization of St. Teresa of Calcutta ... has left me contemplating her life and ministry. While the crowds have dispersed and Rome has returned to normal, the church feels more universal to me than it ever has before. Truly, the church is not contained within the walls of a building nor limited to those of certain backgrounds. The example of St. Teresa of Calcutta is a model to live by, and while I may not complete work to as great an extent as she did, it is still possible to follow her example and 'do ordinary things with extraordinary love?" Waldoch says Rome, a diverse and exciting city, is an excellent place to study history and theology. His study-abroad experience there has let him meet people from all over the world, giving him a global perspective on important issues.

KURT AHONEN '17 ADAM LALUZERNE '16

1994-2016 1993-2016

The campus community mourned along with the families of college friends Kurt Ahonen '17 and Adam LaLuzerne '16 after their deaths in a Lake Michigan accident, July 17, 2016, "They were fine young men." remembers President Tom Kunkel. "who were connected by their passion for service to others. Both were also distinguished students. Put another way, Adam and Kurt were precisely the kinds of students a college president points to with immense pride."

Ahonen, a computer science major, was a member of Emerging Leaders and undertook a TRIPS mission. A member of several student orgs, his love of board games led him to start one of his own: the Board Game Society. He loved sports and the outdoors. His venturesome spirit led to other initiatives, too: start-up businesses, videos, inventions and numerous big ideas. His family says, "He had a good and faith-filled heart and will be remembered as a loving son, brother and a great friend." Experience in his chosen field began with an on-campus job with Information Technology Services, then continued with an internship at Avalara. Scott Crevier (ITS) describes Ahonen as a gem: "A very kind and gentle young man.' He is survived by his parents, Mark and Kellie, his brother, Kyle, and sister, Brynn.

LaLuzerne, an accounting major, had just begun his career as a business analyst at Acuity in Sheboygan, Wis. While at St. Norbert, his commitment to service earned him the Exemplary Leadership Award. LaLuzerne, who worked at the Sturzl Center for Community Service & Learning as an undergraduate, "was goodness in the world," remembers Sandy Murphy (Emmaus Center). "He would add levity to a situation and be the first to offer a hug when someone was in need." His family says LaLuzerne loved SNC, where he received an excellent education and developed a passion for serving others: "He had many opportunities to be involved in campus ministry and service organizations, which were so very important to him." He is survived by his parents, Steve and Lori, his brother, Andy, and his sister, Michelle.

Postscript: In the Summer 2016 obituary notice for Marshall Moss (Music, Emeritus), we neglected to mention Moss' children. Our apologies for this omission: Moss is survived by his wife, Elaine (Music), and by his sons Jonathan '86 (Yoko Onishi) and Christopher '90 (Sarah Richardson '91).

The (not so) great

By MaryBeth Matzek

Tendy Scattergood (Political Science) frequently hears the comment, "it's really bad out there" when people start discussing the 2016 election and the general polarization of the electorate. She challenges that assessment with a two-word response: civil war.

"A lot of people are freaked out by what's going on right now in politics and how polarized both sides are, and that it's never been this bad before," she says. "But really what we are seeing is nothing that's not too far out of the ordinary. The Civil War – now that was the height of political polarization."

Scattergood, who is frequently tapped by Wisconsin news organizations looking for insights into poll numbers and the political landscape, says the current political landscape should not scare anyone.

"The extreme politics we have in the United States is nothing compared to what extreme politics look like in Western Europe," she says. "Everything needs to be looked at in perspective and we need to get away from this hyperbole of people freaking out for no good reason."

The fault lines now showing in the Republican Party are the crystallization of trends that have been going on for years, Scattergood says.

"The GOP has a lot of diverse political ideology in it – it's similar to what the Democrats had in 1968 when you had hippies, civil rights supporters and George Wallace in the same party. When there is a lot of change, this is what historically happens. Politics become more polarized," she said, speaking before the Nov. 8 polls in the U.S. "This has been coming for awhile. The question is – what happens next? Will the Democrats reach out to some of the Republicans who are saying they'll vote for Hillary (Clinton) and look to bring them into the party?"

Scattergood says trying to get a handle on political polarization is challenging since a simple search on Amazon reveals 100 books on United States political polarization. There's been little peer review done and some of the books are just "quackery," she thinks. "There are some books out there (on polarization) that get a lot of attention, but they offer no supporting research," Scattergood says.

Most books are narrow-focused and don't look at how gender and race, for example, play a role in polarization, she adds.

"Polarization pieces do not talk about gender while the gender politics pieces do not get in to polarization. I was looking for some book about polarization that included all the pieces of the pie, but could not find one," says Scattergood, adding she is considering working on a project that addresses all aspects of polarization. "I really didn't expect not to find that big-picture book out there."

While some blame the media for the polarizing state of U.S. politics, Scattergood says it is not that easy.

"The media is a business and they won't give us something we don't want to read and watch," she says. "The media may exasperate polarization, but they didn't cause it."

The popularity of 1980s talk radio is now visible in the multitude of ideological websites that cater to their loyal followers. But Scattergood says studies show that people are good at knowing when news media or websites have biases.

"These ideological sites are preaching to a choir that has already been converted," she says. "A Clinton supporter won't be swayed to change their vote after seeing something on Fox News."

When it comes to U.S. history, it is normal for political parties and leaders to have vastly different views, Scattergood argues. "Take a look at our Founding Fathers. They were divided on several issues. Then there's slavery; that issue polarized the nation's politics for nearly a century," she says. "Really, what we have now is normal when it comes to politics."

There's no question Congress is now deeply polarized, with Republicans moving to the right and Democrats moving to the left, but Scattergood says that's often the case.

"A lot of us just have this idea, based on how politics were after World War II and into the 1950s, that not being polarized was the norm," she says. "But, in fact, being polarized is the norm for Congress."

While pundits provide multiple reasons for polarization in Congress, such as campaign finance reform or gerrymandering, Scattergood isn't easily swaved.

Regarding campaign finance, the 2010 Supreme Court decision that opened the door to so-called Super PACs only intensified the polarization among the parties – it did not cause it, she says. "It was already there," Scattergood says.

As for gerrymandering – when legislatures create state or Congressional districts designed to ensure one party will keep the seat – Scattergood counters the argument that that is sparking more polarization by pointing to the Senate, which is elected by all voters within a state.

"The Senate and House are both equally polarized," she says. "We see, as people grow in their party identification, they do begin to think more poorly of people in other parties, which can lead to polarization."

But what about the American population as a whole? Scattergood believes when it comes to the average American, the differences are not as vast as those exhibited in Congress.

"Some scholars blame party activists for the polarization we see in our political system. Activists and party delegates tend to be more extreme on the issues than the average American," she says. "Delegates (to party conventions) also tend to care about different issues than regular Americans."

The same goes for the country's political elite. "The elites on both side of the aisle are more polarized so that gives the impression that as a country we are more polarized," Scattergood says. "But when you get down to it, most people are not that polarized in their beliefs."

Scattergood likes to debunk the myth that "all government" is polarized. She says each level of government – federal, state and local – can have its own form of polarization or get along without the divisiveness. There are about 88,000 different government units in the country and while some are polarized, others are not, Scattergood says.

"Your local school district could be very polarized, but the one across the river isn't," she says. "That's why, when people say government is all polarized, I have to disagree – not every unit of government across the country is polarized. We need to take a broader view." 📌

FASHION THIS

By Melanie Radzicki McManus '83

particular and a second second

Fast fashion depends on cheap prices made possible by sweatshops, child labor and over-consumption. The industry pollutes water supplies and generates massive amounts of waste. The scale of the problem can be overwhelming; but three St. Norbert faculty members are countering the situation with a series of events that shines a light on harmful practices – at the same time proposing practical, small-scale solutions for those who want a stylish closet that doesn't depend on exploitation.

The 1,000 T-shirt Project of April Beiswenger (Theatre Studies) gave rise to a Godschalx Gallery exhibit of creative work – "And Where She Ends She Doth Anew Begin" – in which Beiswenger drew from her own collection to unpack the unethical realities of T-shirt production and consumption.

Fast-fashion facts

Here's a quick snap of the fashion industry and our purchasing habits:

- ► The global fashion industry tops $1 trillion.
- ► The fashion and textiles industry is the world's second-biggest industrial polluter after the oil industry.
- ► During the clothing production process, up to 8,000 different chemicals are used.
- Americans today buy five times as much clothing as they did in 1980.
- ► Americans recycle or donate a mere 15 percent of their used duds.
- ► About 85 percent of Americans' used clothing goes into landfills - some 10.5 million tons per year.

he clear plastic bin is overflowing with a colorful assortment of clothing: shirts, pants, sweatshirts, skirts. Signs announce passersby should "Take a piece" or "Leave a piece."

A college campus is the perfect spot to bring a pile of secondhand clothing. But while St. Norbert's new Swap Pile is delighting bargain hunters, its creation wasn't out of concern for students' pocketbooks. Instead, its roots lie in fashion, design, art and environmentalism. The swap pile is one small part of

"Fashion This," a series of exhibitions and events being held on campus this fall.

The program explores sustainable and ethical fashion practices through the lens of art and design, and includes a sustainable fashion show, lectures, mending clinics, the swap pile and exhibitions centering on environmentally friendly handcrafted boots, repurposed T-shirts and hand-stitched clothing carefully sourced from organic and sustainable sources. "Fashion This" is the result of serendipity, say the three faculty members who designed the project: April Beiswenger (Theatre Studies), Shan Bryan-Hanson (Art) and Katie Ries (Art). The women were all independently intrigued by the issue of fast fashion – a buzzword for the rapid movement of trendy clothing from catwalk to retailer. Fast fashion is possible due to cheap pricing and harmful employment practices, like child labor and sweatshops. The mass production of low-cost goods also generates staggering amounts of pollution and waste. When the women realized they were each digging into this topic in a unique way, they decided to collaborate on an event series tackling the subject. But "Fashion This" does not simply take a somber look at this depressing - and depressingly large problem. Instead, it aims to help us be more mindful about our clothing, and to have fun doing it.

Practice mindfulness

Americans today recycle or donate a measly 15 percent of their used clothing, leaving the rest to be dumped into a landfill. So two easy ways to become more mindful with your clothing are to donate items you no longer want, and to purchase some secondhand items. Hence the college's new swap pile, a galleryarea centerpiece. Beiswenger, the pile's mastermind, says it's been a hit so far. Some people ignore it, true, but those who engage with it do so eagerly. "No one's half-heartedly digging through it," she says.

Beiswenger regularly refills the bin with new items, tweeting about its latest contents - Hawaiian shirts! Ugly sweaters! The students really came through with the latter, she says, noting most of the ugly sweaters are already gone. But, thankfully, not into a landfill.

"The swap pile shows how something old can be new to me," Bryan-Hanson says, adding that she plans to host a swap party, a growing trend.

Another easy way to practice clothing mindfulness is to critique how you launder your clothing. Are you washing items too often? Frequent washings degrade clothing more quickly. Garments also last longer if you wash them in cold water, then linedry. "It's really just slowing down and taking care of things," Bryan-Hanson says. "It's the opposite of fast fashion."

Ries says she would like to see more people taking a chance and developing their own fashion style. If we limit ourselves to dressing in the clothing that's out there, piecing items together exactly as they appear on mannequins and models, we're letting other people make all our fashion decisions. Instead, Ries says, we should think critically about beauty, fashion and style: "Different looks can be exciting. If you create your own style your sense of what looks great - you may even get closer to your authentic self."

Spend more money

It seems counterintuitive at first: Spend more money on clothing. But here's the thing: Clothing is getting cheaper by the day. Girls' and boys' duds, for example, have dropped 23 and 19 percent, respectively, in the past decade. With fast fashion spurring design changes up to 18 times per year, manufacturers keep up by producing ever-more cheaply made items that fall apart after a few washings.

True Cost"

Beiswenger notes she's still wearing some 25-year-old T-shirts she bought in college, not because they're beloved mementos from the past, but because they are still in great shape. Yet some of the T-shirts she bought a few months ago for $10 or $12 are falling apart. If you shell out more money for better-quality items, they will last longer. Fewer pieces of clothing will need to be dyed or tanned – some of the most harmful processes associated with the clothing industry – and fewer items will go into a landfill.

Bryan-Hanson shopped for quality garments when she put together her own capsule wardrobe: a limited number of clothing items that can be mixed and matched to create innumerable looks. Although she didn't create her capsule to combat fast fashion – "I'll be honest. I wanted to be put-together and not spend a lot of time thinking about it," she laughs – Bryan-Hanson loves what she has created. "Like a lot of people, I like to shop for clothes," she says. "But now I do so carefully, and don't make impulse buys." Her capsule has also allowed her to develop a more personal style that doesn't depend upon trends. Buying something trendy is fine, too, she says, so long as you buy such items with thought and care.

Redefine beauty

One goal Bryan-Hanson has as an artist and curator is to encourage people to see the beauty in handmade objects, imperfections and all. American culture is rather materialistic. We're constantly

The commemorative T-shirts we unthinkingly collect at events are made cheaply by unprotected workers in countries all over the world but our own. Beiswenger uses previously owned shirts as raw material for new clothing, fiber-art pieces and even (above, and on previous page) art installations.

shown ads and images of perfect objects, which makes us tend to view that shirt's uneven stitch, or that coat's crooked stripe, as ugly. But it's not. "... I believe in the beauty of handmade objects," she says, "and imperfections can add to their beauty."

To that end, Bryan-Hanson curated the exhibit "Shelter & Clothing: Rethinking

Mend-It Clinics

Lecture by April Beiswenger, "Fashion This: Sustainable Clothing and You"

Fashion Show: "Knights on the Catwalk"

Panel Discussion: Ethical Consumption

How We Live Today" as part of the "Fashion This" series. The "Clothing" portion of the exhibit showcases the works of Alabama Chanin. A leader in sustainable fashion, the clothing company uses repurposed and reclaimed materials in its pieces, which are fashioned from sustainably sourced organic cotton. Items are either handmade by local artisans or machine-sewn in small quantities.

The "Shelter" portion of the exhibit was located outside of the gallery and, in fact, out of doors, too, as it's a tiny home. Tiny homes are defined as pint-sized abodes measuring 500 square feet or less. (This one comes in at less than 200 square feet.) The tiny home was created by Rebecca Rutter, a Wisconsin-born pastor whose only background in home construction previously was a seventh-grade shop class. She used many recycled materials and learned as she built; any so-called flaws in her home (such as the repurposed siding, which shows a few signs of age) only add to its beauty, says Bryan-Hanson.

Redefining beauty also means that just because something is ordinary doesn't mean it's not also special, says Beiswenger. The theatre studies professor, who has painted many a set, had a large collection of paint-stained T-shirts on hand. So when she and her colleagues were developing "Fashion This," she grabbed those tees, along with others from local thrift shops, and fashioned some into a wallhanging of brightly colored flowers; others, cut into strips, became "yarn" for a crocheted skirt.

Beiswenger's rebirthing of her stained tees begs the question, "What can I throw away?" You shouldn't donate stained clothing, and you might not have the skill or interest to make a floral wall hanging out of it. "What can you throw away?" she asks rhetorically. "I don't know. Go online and Google, 'What do I do with ripped T-shirts?' The biggest thing to become better at is being informed."

Change your thought process

Ten or 15 years ago, very few people owned cloth bags, much less toted them along to the grocery store or mall. Now they're ubiquitous. Why? A cultural shift occurred. A collective change in our thinking about the merits of plastic bags versus paper or cloth. That's what the "Fashion This" creators are hoping to foster; a new way of purchasing clothing with no regrets for the past.

"We don't need to waste time feeling bad," says Ries. "But we do need to get to work." 🔸

knights on the Catwalk

"Knights on the Catwalk," a "Fashion This" event, challenged student designers in two categories: $20 from St. Vinny's (new ensembles from thrift-store purchases) and Fashion From Non-Traditional Materials. A class taught by Katie Ries (Art) introduced the idea of wearable body extensions, spurring many of the entries.

Clockwise from top right: Benjamin Curtis Nelson models an outfit designed by his girlfriend, Katie Vogel '17 (1st place); Dragon (Emma May '19); Patchwork Skirt, modelled by Yi-Lan Niu (Music) for April Beiswenger; May, Lily Quinn '19, Jordan Wood '19 and Lindsay Kropp '19 on the catwalk; Hairy/Scary (Mary Walker '19, 1st place); Sun/ Palm Tree (Nicole Nielsen '19, 1st place); Animal (Amy McBride '17).

Yes you can!

Think it's too difficult to fight fast fashion? Here are some easy ways you can take a stand.

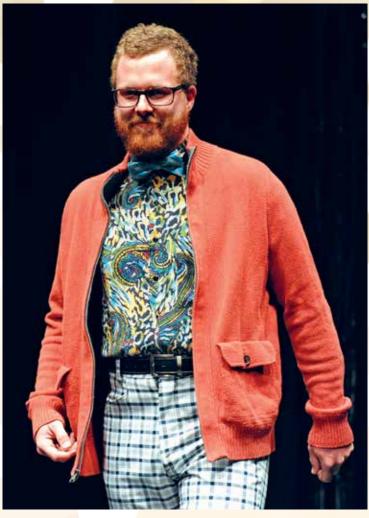

- ▶ Repair worn clothing.
- ► Donate used clothing.
- ▶ Recycle old items.
- ▶ Shop less, but purchase higher-quality pieces.
- ▶ Purchase clothes made from organic cotton. The manufacturing process for regular cotton items is quite harmful.
- ▶ Don't purchase new leather items. Secondhand pieces are O.K.!
- ► Wash your clothes in cold water and dry them outside.

The Way I See It

At a recent national conference for student affairs professionals, hosted at St. Norbert College, experts from around the country gathered to consider the convention's theme: Catholic Higher Education Through the Eyes of Our Students.

By Paul Nicolaus '05

Chutzpah, stick-to-it-iveness, or guts. Call it what you will, but this all-important X factor can separate the brilliant underachievers from those who steadily plug away at an interest, overcoming obstacles with a sense of resilience.

Leaders in the field of positive psychology have discovered that, unlike static factors such as I.Q., this special blend of passion and persistence commonly referred to in educational circles as "grit" is something that can actually be learned and developed. And notably, it may be just as important as intelligence in determining success in life.

Why does this matter? Well, in the words of new Nobel laureate Bob Dylan, because "the times they are a-changin."

Altered adulthood

Take a close look at twenty-somethings in the United States of the 1950s or '60s, and here's what you'll find: husbands and wives, fathers and mothers, and financial support from the man of the house. Manufacturing generated plenty of work that paid a good living wage, creating the company man and the company job. An individual could join a business and stay put for 40 years. If a worker demonstrated loyalty to the company, the company demonstrated loyalty in return.

> In the words of Bob Dylan, because the times they are

Those days are gone, says Tim Clydesdale of The College of New Jersey. The professor of sociology – at St. Norbert this summer for a national conference for student-affairs professionals – notes the disappearance of manufacturing and rise in the service industry, which has led to a loss of middle-income jobs and a rise in both low-skill, low-wage occupations and positions that require advanced degrees and plenty of experience. Job security has vanished, incomes have remained stagnant and high divorce rates have made many skeptical about the prospect of marriage. Meanwhile, lifestyle expectations have continued to creep up over time, perpetuating a "keeping up with the Joneses" mentality.

In 1960, the majority of young adults had completed all five of the traditional markers of adulthood by the age of 30. They'd left home, finished school, gotten married, had children and become financially independent. Today, the majority have not. According to Clydesdale, keynote speaker at the ASACCU conference, this is one of the most significant and unrecognized social changes to occur in the last half-century. It has essentially transformed our idea of adulthood and delayed the entire process.

There are a number of theories to explain away this so-called failure to launch. Some have called this cohort of young adults the dumbest, the laziest and the most narcissistic. "I would say take 80 to 90 percent of what you've heard about millennials and throw it in the garbage can," Clydesdale says. The reality is that adulthood is much harder now.

And the path toward adulthood has only grown bumpier, lengthier and more complex. Many enter college simply because our culture indicates that it's the next logical step beyond high school. That can lead to plenty of floundering in the first year. Almost one out of two who begin college do not wind up finishing.

College students are taking on extraordinary amounts of debt and feel pressure to counteract the price tag of their education. One in three full-time undergrads is putting in more than 20 hours of work per week, Clydesdale says, and one in 10 is working a full-time job. (Beyond 15 hours' work per week, GPA tends to be negatively impacted.)

And don't forget the added pressure, uttered over and over again to those entering their college years, to make this time the "best four years of your life."

For some, this combination is creating an enormous amount of anxiety, stress and pain. About one in four college students has been treated by a mentalhealth practitioner within a year, and estimates indicate that one out of two young adults ages 18-25 has been diagnosed with a mental disorder.

This may paint a grim picture, but Clydesdale insists hope isn't lost.

Beyond academics

This very different path to adulthood means the identity exploration that used to mark adolescence has shifted to a later stage of life. In other words, colleges are presented with an incredible opportunity to shape the character of students, and faith-based institutions are perhaps uniquely suited to this endeavor. The Association for Student Affairs at Catholic Colleges & Universities conference July 19-22 brought professionals from some 44 institutions to St. Norbert to explore that opportunity through the perspectives of their own students.

Moral growth occurs at an incredible rate during this time, especially in those participating in a four-year residential setting, says Kerry Cronin of the Lonergan Institute and the Center for Student Formation at Boston College.

Preaching at students is not the solution. Telling them the answers falls short, too. Trust and friendship are required to have good, open, honest conversation, and the ability to ask good questions is the key to teaching students to become good citizens. Thoughtful questions can lead toward deep and profound insights into their own actions and attitudes, Cronin says, but it's impossible to know which questions to ask if college and university personnel do not know the students.

The solution, or part of it anyways, is love. When members of the college community love their students more than the content of classes, more than deadlines, more than assessments and more than meetings, she says, a greater potential to bring about a powerful and lasting impact exists.

According to responses from the Spring 2015 Multi-Institutional Study of Leadership, which included 97 colleges and 15 Catholic colleges, meaningful relationships are, indeed, being developed. As part of an independent-study project, Morgan Lanahan '17 helped unpack data gathered from this survey.

One of the most striking differences between the Catholic colleges and the national sample related to mentors, or those who intentionally assist students' growth or connect them to opportunities for career or personal development, notes Shelly Morris Mumma (Leadership, Student Engagement/First Year Experience). When students were asked if they had been mentored at their current college or university, the data indicated higher rates in all categories (faculty/instructor, academic or student affairs staff, employer, parent/guardian and other student) at the Catholic institutions.

While all of these relationships offer up potential for powerful learning opportunities, research tells us the most influential person in a student's life during college is another student, Cronin says. So finding ways to meaningfully enter into student conversations is a useful way to empower students to help one another.

"We're trying to connect students with each other and we can't always do that from on high," agrees Bob Pyne (Norman Miller Center for Peace, Justice & Public Understanding). "We need student voices to reach out to other students."

He cites Fouad AlKhouri '17 as a powerful example of a student who has helped facilitate increased awareness and understanding. Back home in the Gaza Strip, Alkhouri is a Palestinian Christian

"He has seen issues of faith and conflict all his life," Pyne says, and his involvement with interfaith programming on campus is significant. "He's able to help us build bridges, which is a great thing."

Holy grit

As students navigate their college careers, learning and growing along the way, the path to adulthood doesn't magically come to an end on graduation day. Part of the secret to success, therefore, relates to the foundation built during these formative years on campus.

While conducting interviews and research that examined programming geared toward the theological exploration of vocation, there was one aspect that really blew Clydesdale away. He found that students who were given the opportunity to sort out their life trajectories and think about their purpose and calling during college were better able to step back from the array of anxieties bombarding them in order to design more meaningful lives.

"The story of life after college is really a story of mishaps, setbacks and disappointments," he says. "And the big difference here was that those who spent time thinking about these things held on to the long view." They figured a way around the setbacks and hung on to their sense of purpose, and what it was that they felt they were called to do. Those who did not have this preparation, on the other hand, would commonly hit a wall, recover, and pivot into a completely different field - potentially losing sight of true interests and passions in the process.

In other words, he found indications that these students had developed a sense of grit. But it was more than that: What Clydesdale found in the young adults who had been given the opportunity to thoughtfully consider vocation is something he likes to call "holy grit."

"They wanted their lives to make a difference for God," he says. "They wanted their lives to make a difference to humankind. They wanted to serve other people." They discovered a larger sense of purpose, graduating with the tools to go both with and against the current as well as the ability to steer around hurdles.

"Purposeful graduates are marked by this type of intentionality and productivity and resilience," he says, and faith-based higher-educational institutions have the potential to send students out into the world with this powerful combination.

For a case in point, look no further than Nicholas Schilling, a third-year student at Notre Dame Law School. While Schilling says he may still be trying to figure out what his professional life might look like, he feels he's been equipped with the tools to stick with a path that suits him well. And, in a hyperactive culture, his education has taught him the valuable lesson that reflection, as he puts it, is the soil in which true cultivation occurs.

It's a sentiment echoed by Patrick Schley, a DePaul University alum and application support specialist for the Tessitura Network for arts and cultural

Research revealed

Tim Clydesdale's research on the post-high school transition culminated in "The First Year Out: Understanding American Teens after High School." His evaluation of an eight-year, 88-campus Lilly Endowment initiative called Programs for the Theological Exploration of Vocation (that included SNC) led to "The Purposeful Graduate: Why Colleges Must Talk to Students About Vocation."

Clydesdale is currently finishing work on a collaborative project on the changing spirituality of emerging adults entitled "The Twentysomething Soul: Understanding the Religious and Spiritual Lives of American Young Adults."

When SNC comes to your house

ore than 1,000 miles away from campus, dozens of St. Norbert alumni take in a different kind of beauty on a cool autumn evening. As the sun sinks low against a picturesque golf course with a mountain view, they sip cocktails inside a stunning Colorado home and trade stories about their alma mater.

Their hosts are Carl Vogel '79 and his wife, Carol, who happily agreed to welcome guests to their home for a "Tom's Last Tango" farewell event. "I've been a fan of Tom's for a long time," says Vogel of President Tom Kunkel, who is visiting alumni and parents in cities near and far during the final year of his nineyear tenure. "I never liked to miss a good party when I was at St. Norbert, and that hasn't changed much," Vogel recalls with a smile. The Vogels opened their doors and provided food and beverages. SNC took care of the invitations and planned a brief program.

As a teenager from a small Wisconsin town, Vogel was drawn to St. Norbert by the opportunity to play baseball, but says he didn't understand until later what a great educational opportunity he had been granted. SNC connections helped him climb early in his career and on to Arthur Anderson, first in Chicago, then Denver. He entered the cable television field just as it was erupting; helping build Dish Network, where he continues to serve as vice chairman.

"We would always want to help [St. Norbert College] in any way possible," says Carol. "It's the least we can do for what they've given us. Our success comes directly from St. Norbert."

She and Carl worried about rainy weather in the hours leading up to the party, but Mother Nature delivered last-minute sunshine. Tom's "tango" became extra festive thanks to south-of-the-border themed drinks and food – served alongside Kunkel's signature favorites, Whopper malted milk balls and Diet Dr. Pepper. "It was relaxed and fun," says Carl. "It was really interesting to see the diversity of the group," Carol adds. "We had a few people in their 70s and a girl who was fresh out of college!"

Scott '99 and Katie Burns '99 attended the party and had a great night. "It's totally different than having it at a bar or a restaurant," says Scott. "It was casual but it was a really more intimate experience. Their house was spectacular. Carl and Carol are great hosts."

The personal touch is the best part about hosting alumni events in people's homes, according to Jessie Deschane '10, SNC's assistant director of alumni communities. "Everyone involved in the event has a tie to the college, which makes the setting even more special. We have to work with what we've got and get creative with seating, decorations, food and everything else."

Vogel says he and Carol would host an encore "tango" in a heartbeat. "We're thrilled to have Tom in our home," says Vogel. "He's done a spectacular job at the college. For us to be a small part of that where we can gather and honor him, it's an honor to do it."

The "Tom's Last Tango" series of 19 events across the United States gives alumni, parents and friends a chance to celebrate how far the college has advanced in the last eight years during the tenure of President Tom Kunkel, and to hear about plans for the future. Alumni office staff hope these special events (hosted at homes, clubs and business venues) will not only give alumni and parents a chance to say goodbye to Kunkel but also create lasting SNC connections in their communities.

Kunkel has announced that he will leave his post as president of St. Norbert College on May 31, 2017. During a sabbatical period to follow, his first project will be a "short and accessible" biography of St. Norbert of Xanten. More about Tango events at snc.edu/ alumni.

Bill Nye or black tie? I'm known for my bow ties. It's been going on since I was a little kid. Any day where I have a public meeting or represent the village, I'm certainly wearing a bow tie. I have two or three dozen that I wear regularly.

Knot cool I embrace it. I have pens in my pocket all the time! Nerds will rule and inherit the earth. But, just now, bow ties are in vogue. Availability has gone up with the "coolness factor."

Hand-tied or clip-on? For the most part they are hand-tied. My biggest fear is one day someone asking me if it's a clip-on – and it being so.

Tied to the job It was a Washington Semester experience with Paul Ryan that kind of got my juices flowing for wanting to work in public service. I always wanted to make a difference. As President Theodore Roosevelt said, "Far and away the best prize that life has to offer is the chance to work hard at work worth doing."

Bow Tie Jr. At one time, I was the youngest person in the state to hold an office like this. I'm still often the youngest person in the room. I'm just now looking at a picture of my son on his second birthday, and he's wearing a plaid shirt with suspenders and a bow tie that my mother-in-law made ichelle Morrison '11 never imagined working with children, nor that she would enjoy it so much. Morrison, in fact, had her feet set on a very grown-up educational path.

A double major in anthropology and history, she went on to earn a master's degree in medieval history at King's College, University of London, in 2014. She returned home to Madison, Wis., to plan her next step – entering a Ph.D. program. Instead, she is working at the Madison Children's Museum. She says, "This career path was a complete happy accident. I was looking for something to do and applied for an internship at the museum, since I remembered how much I enjoyed playing there as a child. I was excited when I got it. Then, a few months later I was hired as a program specialist and I haven't looked back."

Morrison develops a variety of programs for the museum, including drop-in visits, workshops and adult nights (where adults come to the museum and "play" without the kids). While she would still like to earn her doctorate, she has changed its focus. "I'm hoping to develop free-form programing that I learned so much about here, and translate it to history museums and natural history museums," she says.

"[At the museum] I develop different programs that complement my interests or touch on themes that are highly valued in the Madison community. We have a Green Bay Packers fan Zane Statz '14 has lent his enthusiasm to the Packers cause in more ways than one. Ahead of the 2016 Super Bowl, he was one of the "helmet artists" invited to design themed football helmets in all 32 NFL cities.

Statz's golden helmet celebrated Bart Starr, Packers legend and MVP of Super Bowls I and II. The CBS pre-game promotional project benefited others, too: the helmets were auctioned off to raise funds for local charities. Statz's local CBS station, WFRV-TV Green Bay, chose Rawhide Boys Ranch (a cause dear to the heart of Packers legend Bart Starr) as its local beneficiary.

The helmet project is not Statz' first Packers-inspired work. In 2015, he and fellow classmate Spencer Young '13 were commissioned to paint 70-foot-long murals on two highly visible profile fences near Lambeau Field.

Statz is owner of ZAS Designs and, by day, works as a graphic designer and website developer for Insight Creative, a Green Bay agency. Young owns Forever Young Designs, which is based in Black Creek popular chemistry program where we do different experiments with the kids."

Another popular event is the Fractured Fairy Tales program, where Morrison reads a traditional story, but with a twist. "It may be something like 'Goldilocks and One Bear' and I try to engage the kids and have them wonder what will happen or what's different," she says.

Many programs allow Morrison to educate children and their parents about sustainability. This summer she ran one of the museum's garden spaces focused on organic heritage farming. Guests help her maintain it. When it comes to history, Morrison takes advantage of the museum's log-cabin space to teach museum visitors about what life was like in the 1830s. "I had kids help me make pickles out of our bumper crop of cucumbers, just like they did in the 1830s," she says. "That activity connected with kids on several levels."

Morrison has had to learn some teaching skills as she went. "I definitely use the research and community outreach skills I learned at St. Norbert in my job," she says. "I focus on how to take the things I'm excited about, such as history and anthropology, and make them interesting to the kids. I work to have multiple levels to my conversations to include all ages, to make it relatable and still bite-sized, while giving real information," she says.

She admits she's not sure what comes next: "I'm looking forward to the next strange twist in my path; I've found life's more fun on the non-traditional routes!"

Big at heart

When Michelle Morrison joined the Madison Children's Museum, she bonded with another alum -James Belmont '03 the museum's facility rental coordinator. Belmont, who studied music education at St. Norbert, was an active member of the social group BIG. Morrison was a member of BIG's women's auxiliary. "When I found out James was a member of BIG, there was an instant connection,"

Belmont says: "Michelle's work here at MCM is beyond amazing and impactful She highlights and emphasizes with her programming a fun, imaginative, effective way of learning that I've never seen before and find fascinating. A lot of us here at MCM can't wait to see what she's going to do next.'

she says.

Three times the connection

When the CatholicLink Society launched this spring, St. Norbert alums were much in evidence; not surprising, since the society springs from the CatholicLink partnership that connects the college with the Green Bay area's Catholic school systems. The new society recognizes alumni who graduated from a GRACE elementary school, went on to Notre Dame Academy and then furthered their education at St. Norbert College. Representing these "trifecta" alums at the launch were Tyler Arkens '07, Mary Burich '92, Todd Danen '77, Jean Healy '92, Jerry Hruska '80, Fred Lamont '64. Michele Micksch '90. Miriam (Brozvna) Mulva '69 and the Rt. Rev. Garv J. Neville, O.Praem., '73 (abbot at St. Norbert Abbey). And the society continues to grow: to date, some 170 trifectas have come forward. As President Tom Kunkel (above, with Maggie Hogan '15) says, "You trifectas are living billboards for the high quality of, and enduring commitment to, Catholic education in the Green Bay area. Thank you for that vesterday, today and tomorrow,'

Alumni Award Winners 2016

Each year brings with it a new opportunity to honor a few select alumni who have made a significant difference in the lives of others. We celebrate those honored this year.

Alma Mater Award

For nearly a half-century, Terry Kelly '68 has taught English and life lessons, in and out of the classroom, on and off the field. Elected to the Wisconsin Football Coaches Association Hall of Fame in 2008, he also coaches one of the most highly regarded track programs in Wisconsin. Since 1981, he has directed the Senior Shared Life Project, immersing some 250 students each year in service for two weeks - in nursing homes, shelters, schools and social agencies throughout Milwaukee The program transforms the lives of the participants and – by virtue of the 400,000 hours they've devoted over 25 years – the lives of those they serve. Kelly is married to Peg (O'Rourke) Kelly '69.

Distinguished Service to the Norbertine Community

Judy Turba '76 began her career in Norbertine high school environments as educator, administrator and counselor. Later, at St. Norbert College, she held positions in the counseling center, women's center, and alumni and parent relations office. Now, at St. Norbert Abbey, she coordinates public relations for the Norbertine community and directs programming for the Norbertine Center for Spirituality. Under her leadership, the center has increased its number of programs and retreats to more than 200, welcoming more than 10,000 visitors each year. Additionally, Judy serves on the boards of Notre Dame Academy, the YWCA, Heritage Hill and A Woman's Place. She has twice visited Zambia, working to meet the educational needs of the African country's poorest children. Turba is married to Jerry Turba '74.

Distinguished Achievement in Social Sciences

At the University of Illinois, communication professor Leanne Knobloch '96 has received the highest honor at each career stage from every professional organization she belongs to, and from the college and university she has served since receiving her doctoral degree. She's published more than 40 journal articles, 15 book chapters and seven encyclopedia entries. She serves on the editorial boards of five academic journals. Her work focuses on how people communicate during times of transition within marriage and family relationships, and she is currently in the midst of a United States Department of Defense research project studying how military couples navigate the transition from deployment to reunion. Knobloch is married to David Schug '96.

Young Alumni Award

Ian Klein '10 was named one of Forbes' "30 Under 30" while still pursuing his doctorate. His research explores ways of reusing waste from wood processing – work that has global environmental implications. His startup, Spero Energy, refines such processes, applying them to the creation of everything from food additives to biofuels. He recently won a $1 million grant to expand research into technologies with a significant economic and societal impact. Klein is married to Vanessa (Ashworth) Klein '12.

Klein's work was the subject of a feature in the Fall/Winter 2015 issue of this magazine.

Farewell to a friend

With this issue, we say farewell to Drew Van Fossen, who moves on after devoted leadership of college communications that includes his 13 years as art director of this magazine. Our magazine, like all the college's publications, owes everything to Drew's sensibility, his aesthetic, his editorial savvy, his well-versed and disciplined professional flair. and above all to his heart. Without his dedication. your magazine would be a much poorer thing.

Drew's wise counsel and insightful direction have contributed mightily to the way people know of and understand the college as it is today. It was all done with a giving spirit that has won our department many friends. Recently, it won Drew himself the college's Founder's Award – the coveted annual honor given to those who contribute most mightily to the Norbertine tradition and spirit on campus.

Early on. Drew prevailed in one small creative difference of opinion, saying, "Nothing can ever be too beautiful." After that, we just left him to it.

Service with a smile ... and with ketchup

The ITS service desk has gone mobile to meet technology needs anywhere on campus - and it serves hot dogs, too! Well, sometimes. With SNC-compliant umbrella aloft and a hot-dog roller grill on board, the new mobile service desk has been seen 98 square feet, and call it home. It's a sustainable living option that attracted plenty of attention when it was parked outside the Bush Art Center for some weeks this fall. The tiny house – at St. Norbert for the "Shelter & Clothing" exhibit (page 22) – was a draw for SNC Day visitors and others checking out the Aug. 29-Oct. 23 show. Guests, welcomed in ones and twos, were able to admire the loft sleeping area, dining space, fitted kitchen, closet and (yes!) shower, all shoe-horned into this perfectly practical residence.

When the Neville Public Museum in Green Bay wanted to know more about its bottle of 80-year-old Rahr's Pale Beer, they turned to biologists at St. Norbert with two questions. Was the beer drinkable? (Yes! "You know, the hops had sort of faded; there was a lot of roundness to it. But the malt was well-balanced. It was a tasty beer.") Would it be possible to detect a live yeast strain in order to recreate the brew? (Sadly, no. But we tried!)

Our friends want to know

The college looked great: the facilities – including the new Mulva Family Fitness & Sports Center rising on the former Schuldes site -

These Mulvas ... do they have sons? ANSWER: Yes! But both are already married.

Your showers are so clean – what's the secret? ANSWER: The Works. (Says Massey, who put the question to Housekeeping, "I thought I might be going to hear something about radical hospitality, or perhaps that no task is too small if performed with great love ... and there is that, too.")

Fit and fortunate for a viable future

2015-16 President's Report & Honor Roll of Donors

Fit and fortunate for a viable future

s I write this, a cavernous rectangular pit has appeared in the ground just off Stewart Street near the south end of the Manion Townhouse complex. It might be starting out as a muddy hole, but soon enough it will metamorphose into a beautiful swimming pool – the glass-encased centerpiece of the new Mulva Family Fitness & Sports Center, which will open in conjunction with next May's Commencement.

At St. Norbert, we have been talking about a campus swimming pool for a long time. How long? Well, the original plans for the Schuldes Sports Center, which opened in 1979 and which is being subsumed by the new arena, also included a pool. In fact, it would have been located pretty much where Miron Construction's workers are digging right now. But without enough money for that, the college's leaders at the time just couldn't take the pool plunge.

We have been more fortunate this time around. In the same way that the Gehl-Mulva Science Center has been a transformational resource for the academic and intellectual life of SNC, the new fitness and sports complex will fundamentally change the campus experience for our students, and in all the best ways. As you know, we say our mission is to educate students in mind, body and spirit. We've more or less had the mind and spirit parts covered since we opened our doors in 1898. But as for their physical-fitness needs? That has been a nagging challenge, from those earliest days when fitness at SNC meant intramural boxing and a few rounds with the medicine ball.

With the pool, a state-of-the-art fitness complex, a new indoor track, a number of spaces devoted to yoga and other exercise and rehabilitative activities, and a spacious Wellness Center that gets our current health- and counseling-related offices out of a cramped Main Hall basement, the Mulva Family Fitness & Sports Center promises to become one of the busiest spots on campus. But advances like this don't come cheap. The fitness center – at nearly double the space under roof than Schuldes – will cost upward of $26 million, which after the science building is the second most expensive construction project the college has ever undertaken. Miriam and Jim Mulva's incredible generosity in a lead gift has covered half of that amount, and thankfully guite a few other benefactors have followed their lead. We're still working hard to secure the unpledged "tail" on the project.

Indeed, when that drive is done, we will have had the good fortune to invest almost $140 million in new, renovated and repurposed resources on this campus in my nine years. More to the point, at a time when higher education is under (appropriate) scrutiny for rising costs, I'm proud to say that virtually all this new infrastructure has been privately underwritten, keeping it out of SNC's operating budget – that is, we have not put this investment on the backs of our tuitionpaying students.

Nor, despite what you might have read about college arms races, are these facilities by any stretch of the imagination "luxuries." Each has been central to the student experience and the financial stability of St. Norbert College.

Take the fitness center. Increasingly, facilities such as this are simply essential. As a residential campus, St. Norbert actually requires students to live here. (Only a small number - a tad over 10 percent of our students who reside within a short drive of the college – are waived out of this requirement.) But in insisting on our students being resident, it's only fair that we provide a residential experience that is both satisfying and healthy. Today's college students are concerned about their fitness, thank goodness, and they are no more interested in a campus without serious exercise spaces than business travelers want hotels without exercise spaces. Besides that, for those looking to stave off boredom, especially in the winter months, any constructive alternative to bar-hopping is a good thing!

Or consider the science building. Very early in my time here it became evident that St. Norbert was either going to demonstrate its long-term commitment to the sciences or it wasn't. The Minahan Science Building was middle-aged and showing it, with some labs starting to resemble museum pieces. With the glittering new science center, however, we are poised to teach and perform science at the highest level for the next several decades. And of course, the Gehl-Mulva Science Center also facilitated our becoming the host site for the Medical College of Wisconsin's Green Bayarea campus, a development that is already throwing off dividends.

The library? Well, let's just say you can't be a serious college without a serious library. Michels Commons? Come on, everybody knows students need good food to fuel all that studying over at the library!

As for Schneider Stadium: Not only was our old football stadium in East De Pere on the verge of falling down, but athletics are increasingly vital to enrollment. That's especially true with football and the male population. (In any given year the freshman football roster can account for between 5 and 10 percent of the entire freshman class.) Almost as impactful is our growing track program, which recruits both men and women – and remember, we didn't even have a viable track before Schneider. The men's and women's soccer teams benefit from the stadium too, naturally. And just down the road, our baseball and softball programs got their own shiny new home a few years back when we completely reimagined the Mel Nicks complex.

I could go on, but you get the point.

These resources are wonderful in and of themselves, but they are even more significant for what they make possible overall at St. Norbert: a first-rate faculty and instructional regimen; full enrollment composed of an ever more accomplished study body; creative partnerships like those we enjoy with Bellin College and the Medical College of Wisconsin; a comprehensive living environment that complements the classroom setting; and the opportunity to truly educate the entire person.

And since this issue of the magazine is our annual report on giving to St. Norbert College, it's fitting that I end with this simple truth: None of this progress would have been possible without you. Thank you, and God bless you!

The 1898 Society

The 1898 Society recognizes all those whose support is fueling the momentum that is taking St. Norbert College to new standards of excellence. Named for the founding year of St. Norbert College, the society celebrates the long tradition of support for the college, and it honors all donors – individuals, couples, foundations and corporations – regardless of the nature of their gift. The college's achievements over the past 118 years and its vision for continued growth are both testimony to the ongoing generosity of the friends whose gifts, large and small, make all possible.

Within the 1898 Society, specific acknowledgement is made of donors who have distinguished themselves through their lifetime giving, through their annual giving, through their steadfastness (consecutive giving) and through their foresight (planned giving).

Additional information about the 1898 Society is available at giving.snc.edu/1898society. Our Honor Roll of Donors appears in the following pages, and is maintained online at snc.edu/go/annualreport.

How the giving levels work:

Lifetime Giving

Norbert Guild – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $1 million or more over their lifetime. Pennings Guild – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $250,000 or more over their lifetime. Burke Guild – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $50,000 or more over their lifetime.

Current Giving 2015-16

President's Club – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $2,000 or more over the previous fiscal year. Dean's Club – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $1,000-$1,999 over the previous fiscal year. Main Hall Club – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $500-$999 over the previous fiscal year. Founder's Club – Donors who have made gifts to St. Norbert College totaling $100-$499 over the previous fiscal year.

Planned Giving

Anselm Keefe Society – Donors of any age who have made a planned gift: a future bequest, charitable gift annuity, charitable remainder trust, charitable lead trust or life insurance policy with St. Norbert College as a beneficiary.

Parting Shot / Ringing in Heritage Week

A bell's not a bell 'til you ring it. A song's not a song 'til you sing it. Love in your heart wasn't put there to stay. Love isn't love 'til you give it away! – Oscar Hammerstein II
