myths? In this interactive session, we’ll explore and debunk many popular brain myths and discuss evidence for those that may have a hint of truth. An opportunity to view and handle a real human brain will be provided.

Norbertine Studies

abbot, smuggled pliers, a rope made of knotted bed sheets, and escape under the cover of darkness intrigue, set in 16th-century Spain. Learn about the history of the Norbertine order in Spain and the trials and tribulations that caused its eventual demise under the reign of King Philip II.

The Desire for Regard
Is a Double-Edged Sword Grant Rozeboom, Assistant Professor of Business Administration-Ethics
Miriam B. and James J. Mulva Library, Room 101 Humans beings have a basic desire to be well-regarded. This session will explore the social impact of how this need can lead to self-respect, but can also lead to competitiveness and envy. We will use the theoretical framework of 18th-century philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau to analyze our basic desire for regard and understand some of our current social and political problems as malignant manifestations of it.

Scooby Serves
Corday Goddard, Associate Dean of Student Development
Austin E. Cofrin Hall, Room 15 What if the study of leadership wasn’t just about being a big shot? What if leadership — at least leadership studied at a Norbertine institution — also called on us to use those leadership skills to marry our deep gladness with the world’s deep hunger.
What might we ask students to know, value or be able to do that looked like serving others instead of being served? Join us for this new perspective on leadership.

SESSION 5 – 3:15-4 p.m.

canon with liquid nitrogen. Come join the fun!
